

"LEGS" DIAMOND CLINGS TO LIFE DESPITE RELAPSE

Condition Described as Critical; Victim is Now Delirious

POLICE ARE BALKED Refuses to Give Statement Identifying His Assailants

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—(INS)—Despite a pulmonary relapse, Jack "Legs" Diamond clung to life today. Suffering from four bullet wounds fired by unknown gunmen Sunday in the Hotel Monticello, the racketeer was reported in intense pain in Poly-clinic Hospital, where physicians were ready to abandon hope for his recovery.

At the hospital Diamond's condition was described as critical. He was reported delirious part of the time. His condition has been aggravated by congestion in the chest, where a bullet struck him and lodged in the left side. Police were balked because of Diamond's sinking in their efforts to wring from him a statement concerning the identity of the men who shot him. However, even in the event of his recovery, Diamond was not expected to reveal his assailants. Police said they did not doubt that Diamond knew who shot him and they were equally certain the racketeer had no intention of telling who made the attack or revealing the slightest clue that might lead to establishment of their identity.

Quietly his wife visited him last evening, remaining at his bedside for half an hour. It was reported the gangster failed to recognize her.

As the dying racketeer struggled in silence in the same room where Arnold Rothstein died two years ago, lips sealed as tight as Diamond, police made little progress in solving the mystery shooting. They held five persons as material witnesses but in preliminary statements none of these persons (Continued on Page 4)

SOME HORSES CARRIED DOWN STREAM FOR A DISTANCE AS HUNTING PARTY CROSSES THE BIG SMOKY RIVER, A SWIFT ALBERTA STREAM

Killing of A Moose is Told Of by Hulmeville Resident, Who Was Member of the Party — Difficulty Encountered in Trying to Find Balance of Party

The third portion of the account of the trip after big game in Alberta, Canada, participated in by Dr. Joseph Vansant, Fox Chase; Samuel Reed, Harrisburg; and Cyrus E. Smith, Hulmeville, is herewith set forth:

By Cyrus E. Smith

On the fifth of the month, our ninth day out, we moved on to other hunting grounds, experiencing the longest day's travel we had, but with an easy, open trail. Late in the afternoon we came out upon the banks of the swift flowing Smoky River, and soon found we had to cross. The big Canadian laid the way. He was on a big bay 16 hand gelding, and I followed on a 14½ hand bay mare. We went before the rest, as I planned to take a moving picture of the group making its way across the river. My mount's good swimming qualities made up for what I lacked, keeping abreast of the gelding until they struck the current, after which it was necessary for the animals to swim. The Big Smoky was swift, wide and deep, and it seemed at times as if the current was just whirling us around and around. Finally the horses' feet touched bottom and we enjoyed the sight of the rest of the outfit making its way across the river. While they had started over lined up one behind the other, by the time they struck the current of deep water several of the horses were carried downstream, struggling all the time. At times all that could be seen of some of the animals were their heads and backs above the rushing waters. The horse wrangler went under, nearly out of sight. One of the pack horses was carried far down stream, but finally made shore. All of the party, and much of the paraphernalia were wet through. It was the fact we had to go so long afterwards in water-soaked clothes that bothered us, as the outfit did not halt to allow time to dry off, and we didn't stop to make camp for four hours. When we finally did make camp, we found the clothing in our duffle bags and a lot of provisions on the pack horses were wet, some of the food being spoiled. The last two hours of this trip, from eight until ten p. m., was made through black spruce forest, and we wound back and forth over a rocky mountain stream. It was so dark we could see nothing ahead, and the horses stumbled over rocks. The guides would search out the trail with a flashlight, and each horse would keep its nose up close to the horse's rump ahead. We trusted to luck, but hit tree limbs many times in the jaunt. By ten o'clock it was raining and from then until we got the three tents pitched and food cooked and partaken of three hours had passed. All night it continued to rain as well as the next day. On that day, September 6th, we remained in camp, as we needed to dry out as much as possible, owing to our ducking in the river the day previous. Water had run under the tent sides during the night, and rain had also come through a hole in the top of the tent. Our water-proof sleeping bags were the only things that kept us dry. HERE AND THERE IN BUCKS COUNTY TOWNS

Morrisville Council is Advised to Repair Streets at Once

WILL GO INTO COURT

Stacy B. McEntee, Doylestown attorney, has served notice on the members of Morrisville Common Council that unless they placed the streets of Washington Heights in condition within two weeks he would hall them into the Court of Quarter Sessions at Doylestown for maintaining a nuisance.

The section in question is in the center of the borough, being one block west of Pennsylvania Avenue and two blocks north of Bridge Street.

In answer to that command, council members stated that they were willing to co-operate, but that they could not advance large sums for street repairs until the streets are properly deeded to the borough.

Some time ago residents of the Washington Heights section appeared before a meeting of council and asked that the streets be repaired. They cited instances during Winter months when the heavy mud made the thoroughfares impassable and further declared that it was almost impossible for coal trucks and other vehicles to make deliveries.

The residents further based their argument for street improvements on the ground that they pay borough and school taxes and are therefore entitled to have the streets of their section in passable condition.

The section in question was laid out by the Washington Heights Realty Company, but Council charges that the streets were never properly graded by that firm nor deeded officially to the borough.

Until the streets are deeded, Council members stated, they could not proceed with extensive improvements to the streets.

Mr. McEntee's ultimatum came in the form of a letter which was read at the regular meeting of Council. His language was blunt and to the point. He stated that he fully intended to pursue his drastic course unless the streets were put into condition within two weeks.

Still brooding over his wife who died five years ago, Abraham Barth, 73, of 101 Cottage street, Doylestown, made his third unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide yesterday by driving in front of a moving trolley car on South Main street in front of the Sunoco Gasoline Service Station.

A short time ago Barth tried the same stunt, but failed, and on another occasion he tried to jump in front of an automobile.

"I have been trying to end my life for six months; I am tired of living," Barth told Chief of Police James J. Welsh who took him to the county prison yesterday to await examination by a lunacy commission which will be appointed by the Court today.

Marshall White, of Willow Grove, motorman of the trolley car in front of which Barth jumped yesterday, brought the car to a sudden stop as he noticed Barth dive in front. Barth's body was caught by the safety device that the motorman lowered to the concrete highway as the man jumped. The only injury sustained by Barth was a bruise on the right arm.

Painful Torch Burns Are Tullytown Man's Experience

TULLYTOWN, Oct. 15.—Frank Coutchneal, of Lovett avenue, was painfully burned with a torch while at work at the plant of the Charles Warner Company, Sunday morning.

From a report received it is stated that Coutchneal and other workmen were using a torch. Coutchneal handled the torch to a fellow workman, and in doing so burned the fellow workman's hand. This man gave the torch a quick turn burning Coutchneal about the face and eyes. It is not known as yet whether his sight will be affected or not.

NO UTILITIES CAN OBJECT TO PINCHOT, CLAIMS MARTIN

Republican Candidate's Policies Will Not Be Disproved by Group

RECORD IS DEFENDED

State Chairman Points to The Adoption of the Budget System

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Oct. 15.—(INS)—Policies of Gifford Pinchot, Republican nominee for Governor, relating to public utilities, today bore the stamp of approval of the head of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania.

At a rally of the Centre County Republican Committee at Centre Mills, near here, General Edward Martin, Republican State Chairman, told his hearers "there is nothing in the personal policies advocated by Gifford Pinchot to which any fair public utility can object."

There is a widespread belief, Martin said, that the time has come for sweeping changes in the methods of the Public Service Commission and he pointed out that Francis Shunk Brown, Pinchot's opponent in the primary, had advocated such changes.

Discussing the bolt of financial leaders to John M. Hemphill, Liberal-Democratic candidate, on the ground that Pinchot's election would be detrimental to business, General Martin said:

"As a professional and business man I have always been rated ultra-conservative. The Government has decided, however, that better and cheaper service can be rendered in some things by giving them monopolies. These are principally the public utilities and, while advocating as little interference as possible by Government in business, governing regulations must be enforced in regard to these monopolies in order that both consumer and stockholder be served well."

The State chairman defended Pinchot's record in relation to business by pointing to the adoption of the administrative code for the State and the budget system.

Both, Martin asserted, have aided administration of the state business and have not been detrimental to general business.

BRIDGE OVER DELAWARE WILL UNDERGO REPAIRS

Four Wooden Spans Will Be Replaced With Steel

COSTS ABOUT $96,000

ERWINNA, Oct. 15.—At a recent meeting of the Joint Free Bridge Commission for New Jersey and Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, there were two decisions of interest to residents of the Delaware Valley. Louis Focht, engineer and superintendent, reported that careful inspections of the four wooden spans on the Erwinna-Frenchtown bridge revealed dangerous conditions, and he recommended they be replaced with steel.

There are two steel spans on the bridge which replaced wooden spans washed away in the flood of 1903. The wooden spans are so badly cracked and decayed that it was feared they could not be repaired, except at a cost almost as great as the cost for new steel spans. After careful deliberation it was decided to replace the wooden spans with steel at a cost approximating $96,000.

Senator Clarence J. Buckman, chairman of the commission, said there had been no serious accidents on any of the bridges taken over by the commission, and he hoped this record could be maintained. For that reason he favored improving the bridge for safety and comfort to the public.

Engineer Focht said that it will take all winter to fabricate the steel for the bridge, and that the work could be done early next spring. This will raise the capacity of the bridge from five to twelve tons, which will equal Lambertville bridge. The work will also include a sidewalk on the structure.

Over a year ago the commission signed an agreement with the Lumberville Bridge Company to take over that structure at a cost of $25,000 and free it to the public. But when titles were being prepared, it was found that none existed for the approaches on the New Jersey side. Adjoining property had been owned by John W. Connors, now deceased, and his heirs claimed the bridge approach, bringing suit for $5,000 against the bridge company.

Decision was handed down by Judge Jess recently, in which he upheld the bridge company's right to the approach grounds. However, six months are allowed for an appeal, and the bridge cannot be taken over and freed until that is settled.

HE WANTED TWO USHERS; HE HAD 30 APPLICANTS

Last night Edward Lynn, the genial manager of the Grand Theatre, advertised in the Courier for two girls to act as ushers at the Grand Theatre.

"No sooner was your paper on the street than my door-bell and telephone began to ring. I was pestered to death," was Mr. Lynn's comment.

The advertisement requested the applicants to apply at the theatre office and there at seven o'clock were 30 girls in line waiting to interview Mr. Lynn. At 7.15 Mr. Lynn arrived and was confronted by 30 applicants for the position. There were blondes and brunettes; some were tall and some were short, others were lean and some were stout.

Mr. Lynn interviewed the young ladies and somewhat perplexed by the large number responding he decided to make his selections by the process of elimination. He picked six or eight from the 30 and then selected two from the smaller group. A Croydon young lady and a Bristol girl were the successful applicants.

Courier "ads" do bring results.

LYNCHINGS

An alarming increase in lynchings this year after several years of constant decrease has spurred Washington to action. With the sanction of the president a voluntary and unofficial commission national in representation has been formed to study this cause of national shame and devise preventive measures.

The commissioners are all Southerners and all men who command respect and public confidence. It will have the counsel of an advisory body, composed of negro educators and the Commission of Inter-Racial Cooperation, an organization of the race problem.

This method of procedure is in accord with President Hoover's belief that a thorough sifting of the facts must precede determination of a public course of action. This important function a commission such as that now acting can perform effectually.

Deploring lynchings will not impeach Judge Lynch. Prosecuting lynchings as murderers will help in their prevention. Treating lynching parties as public benefactors encourages such mob outrages.

Speedy and impartial justice in those cases which usually arouse the emotions of the crowd and provoke mob violence would, in time, convince that element which takes the law into its own hands that the courts can and will avenge the wrongs against society they so deeply resent.

NEW IMMIGRATION PLAN

All immigration may be placed on a more strictly selective basis as the result of the success of the government's plan for reducing immigration during the period of unemployment through the denial of visas.

Secretary of Labor Davis and others have often advocated a "flexible" immigration scheme, but hitherto with the idea that additional legislation would be needed. The difficulty of changing the immigration law has frequently been shown. It is only since the war that any serious attempt has been made to reduce and regulate the flow of newcomers. The first proposal of a quota system was vigorously opposed.

Under the plan now proposed preference, within the quota limits, would be given to those aliens who would help fill an economic need. Members of an overcrowded trade or labor group would be barred.

This is, of course, no panacea for surplus labor problems in time of business depression. More aliens would be admitted in prosperous times than could be employed in hard times, but it would be an aid. The principle of selecting immigrants according to the needs of this country, instead of according to the needs of foreign countries, is sound. If it can be applied through administrative action, without precipitating another fight in Congress, well and good.

Things never are as bad as they seem. Think how many people never need a lawyer.

If Mr. Mussolini is an egotist, what will he be when he learns that it takes 59 men to rule the United States?

answered confidently and proceeded to do it. Never, Robert MacBeth admitted, had he been made so comfortable.

"My word, you have gentle hands for a big fellow," he exclaimed, looking up with gratitude at the tall form that bent over him to straighten a pillow.

"Plenty of practice."

Robert MacBeth checked himself when he started to say "Where?" He remembered that this tall, slim young man before him had been through a dreadful novitiate during the great war.

"Why," he asked after a moment, as Sir George moved to ring for the waiter, "why do you so determinedly avoid rich girls? Seriously isn't that what you came here for—to make a rich marriage?"

Sir George drew himself erect and turned quickly and savagely. Then, as though the sight of the other man's helplessness checked his natural resentment, stiffened, "That what you think, too?"

"Isn't it true? Or at least partly true?" Robert MacBeth questioned, taking advantage of his infirmity. "Wouldn't it help you put Sandisbrae in order and yourself on your feet?"

The young man's face darkened. "Oh, undoubtedly! But I'm not going to put Sandisbrae in order at that price, nor am I sure that it would not take me off my feet."

He paused. "If you will believe me, sir, I would like very much to have it finally understood that I came out here for a job and nothing else. I'd like to put myself on my own feet." He looked up again. "No matter what dear old Aggy says, that's the truth and," he hesitated, "and I'd be obliged if you would bring yourself to believe it, and to tell Miss Roberta that you do believe it."

"Why, particularly Roberta?" MacBeth asked dryly.

"Because," the young man's face paled, "possibly if she was assured of this by you, she might change her attitude."

"Which is?"

"Which is one that I have not been accustomed to," Sir George said simply, "and one which is not pleasant for a self-respecting man. If it will help matters out," he continued, still with the same quiet simplicity, "you can assure Miss Roberta that if she had the wealth of India belted around her waist, I wouldn't look the road she walked on, much less want to marry her." His tone was heated.

Roberta's father surveyed him with gathering rage. "Set your mind at rest," he declared grimly. "There's no danger of her ever looking your road. I have that from her own lips."

"Good! Then if you will take the trouble to tell her I never dreamed of lifting my eyes to her, or to your pocketbook, you may make it easier for her to treat me as a harmless young man, her father's diligent secretary and no spy."

"What do you mean by that?" demanded Robert MacBeth, and receiving no answer, at once, said even more anxiously, "What do you mean by 'spy'?"

"That I am not one. Yet Miss MacBeth treats me as though I were continually spying upon her."

"What reason has Roberta to fear that?" her determined father asked again.

"I plead ignorance," declared his secretary, inwardly cursing himself for having even hinted at it. "I don't know the reason for her suspicion. I only know that it is so, and she makes me feel it."

The waiter entered with the supper and arranged it on the library table. MacBeth settled himself on his pillows and, as he picked up his soup spoon regarded the young man with amusement. "Funny way to spend an hour at a party. I appreciate it, of course, but it makes me wonder."

"There's no cause to wonder." The younger man's tone was so weary—so disillusioned—that it startled MacBeth. "I don't give twopenny for parties, sir. Haven't for years. Never really at home, really enjoying myself. That's why I would rather eat with you, sir. Somehow," he added, "despite the fact that you are older, and my 'boss,' I have always had a feeling that you like me—for myself."

"You are not far off," MacBeth told him, "I liked you from the first. I'm going to sit here day by day, doing nothing, and watching you bring home the bacon."

Sir George stared at him in amazement.

"I mean watching you do the work that I ought to do."

"Oh—Odd expression that! I thought it meant a little marketing on my part for the household, and I was just a trifle bothered. I never did market, but of course that's no reason why I shouldn't begin."

"Atta boy! Reach me a cigarette. Don't you like the boys here?" MacBeth asked as the younger man rose to get the cigarettes.

"Oh, immensely! Only they seem very young to me," said Sir George, as he discovered that the matches were not with the cigarettes, but on a stand near the window, and moved to get them.

Robert MacBeth opened his lips to tell him that Ray Browne and others had been in France during the war and were fully as old if not older than Sir George, when he remembered that the boys who went over from here, though they fought and suffered as bravely as any there, had at least come home to a land of settled peace and plenty, which had not been Sir George's case. He was about to put something of this in words, when to his amazement the cigarettes were dashed on the desk and Sir George, with a quick low exclamation went plunging through the window and along the terrace, in rapid pursuit of some one or something.

CHAPTER VIII

Some one had been listening at the window. Though he flung himself so headlong into the pursuit that he was still carrying in his hand a box of matches and the single cigarette which he had taken out of the box for MacBeth, Sir George was not in time to see his quarry round the corner. He flung the matches and cigarette from him, and leaped over the edge of the terrace and went toward the little landing place, where he could see a man getting into one of the canoes.

He had every reason to believe that in a moment he would have him in his grasp when Roberta MacBeth rose suddenly, it seemed to him out of the earth, though it was really only from behind the shrubbery near the landing place, and blocked his way. He flung out his hand, to keep from falling himself or knocking her down, and grasped her shoulders. He spun her out of the way, disregarding her gasp of, "What's wrong?"

But the delay had been sufficient. There was no sign of the man he had been pursuing, and when he reached the water's edge there was no one there. Mechanically he began searching for some hiding place among the boats, when Roberta joined him. She was alone and breathless, and both facts made Sir George suspicious.

"What happened?" she asked him abruptly.

He answered her with equal abruptness. "You have just prevented my capturing some one who was watching, or listening, under your father's window."

She gave him a quick startled look, and then raising her voice a little higher, whether with intent or astonishment he could not be quite sure. "What things you imagine. How could he have come this way without my seeing him?"

Sir George did not answer. He went down to the water's edge and then started toward the bridge which lay in shadow. Instantly this provoking girl was in front of him again.

"I asked you—"

In the heat of his anger at her persistence he answered her as he would not have done if he had stopped to think for a moment. "Some friend of yours, evidently, since you are so anxious to screen him."

She stepped back as though he had struck her.

"Do you mean—" she began.

"I don't mean anything," he answered, avoiding her. "I would like to continue my search alone. Go back to your guests, or go back to your father, and explain to him why you blocked my way."

He had twisted from her now. If she had wished to stop him she could not. He ran, with the quick swiftness which his long legs made possible, across the little bridge and up the road that led to the highway. The road behind and before him was quite empty. He waited a moment, his senses alert, for any movement in the brush but there was none. Not a sound, so far as he could hear. He went slowly back to meet, as he crossed the bridge, various riotous greetings and questions as to where and when he had lost his girl. He replied to them in the same jesting tone, relieved that he had not been seen running along the terrace, and that no one had been alarmed.

Robert MacBeth gave him a quick inquiring look. He answered it with a little warning frown.

Lady Sandison went toward the door with some of Robert's guests, saying in a low voice to her stepson, as she passed him: "Dance with Roberta, laddie. She's missed you."

"I can't flatter myself so much as to believe that, Aggy. I advise you—as they say over here—to 'lay off' us. You can't drive us together."

"Dear me, dear!" said Lady Sandison and hurried after her guests.

"Well?"

BEAUTIFUL and CHARMING! It's an added special quality that makes the beauty of a pretty girl. But she's a natural favorite to begin with. And for the same reason Camels are favorites with the modern crowd. Scientific principles govern their manufacture; but the mildness, the fragrance, the delicate flavor are natural qualities of the tobacco.

There's enjoyment in the smoking of a Camel. Camels go with happy faces . . . a lift of spirits with the opening of every fresh, fragrant pack. For Camel's delightful mildness holds all the natural goodness of choicest tobaccos. Don't confuse it with the flatness or insipidness of "over-treated" cigarettes.

BIG THREE COACHES WORRY OVER GAMES

By Copeland C. Burz
I. N. S. Sports Writer

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—It is practically a two-to-one bet the football coaches of the one-time big three—Yale, Harvard and Princeton—rolled out of bed today as tired, troubled and sleepy as the fabled Cyclops, whose one eye never closed. Harvard meets Army this Saturday, Yale plays Brown and Princeton takes on Cornell in a line-up that should induce insomnia in any mentor.

Of the big trio Harvard is the only team that has not been tested this season and the same is true of the Crimson's opponent, Army. Harvard has been developing slowly but certainly will present a formidable team against the Cadets. Yale, even though defeated by Georgia last week, has a powerful enough squad to call on a super effort from Brown, despite the fact the Providence eleven clawed the Tiger last week-end. Gil Lobbie possibly may have another of his wonder outfits at Cornell and another dismal afternoon probably awaits the Black and Orange.

At West Point Major Sasse has a fine set of backs to take up the work of the much lamented Cagle and Murrell but just what the new cadet backfield can do under fire hasn't been demonstrated. The situation is identical with the Crimson backs, who are yet to feel the force of first class competition this season, although they have been under fire in previous years.

Following its fall before Georgia, the Eli squad has undergone an almost complete revamping of plays. New backfield plays have been introduced and the chances are that the fallacy of building a one-man outfit was driven home to the Yale coaches by the failure of Albie Booth to be more impressive last Saturday.

Dickens, the star defense back of the Georgia eleven, revealed after the game that Georgia was able to get an excellent line on almost every play by watching Booth.

"The Yale team would have been harder to stop if they had used the huddle," said Dickens, "for then we would not have been able to watch Booth's eyes."

With Booth out of the line-up, Dickens said, it was much more difficult to forecast the plays.

If Yale wins over Brown, the defeat of the secretly clicking Rhode Island machine must be charged up to lack of weight. That is the only fault of the Providence eleven.

Cornell gets its chance to line up with Colgate, Syracuse, Carnegie Tech and Brown, eastern elevens that have been tested and remained on top. The scores which Doble's 1930 eleven have run up this season indicate plenty of power in the Big Red machine. In three games against fair opposition Cornell has rolled up a total of 174 points.

Cornell's line is said to be rather weak because of its lightness and against a fighting team such as Princeton scoring will not be so easy. Bart Viviano, Doble's new George Pfann, is touted as a genuine gridiron sensation and what he can do against more important opposition than he has met to date will be of considerable interest.

Harvard will have a distinct advantage over Army in field generalship. They say that Barry Wood, the Crimson quarter, has one of the best football backgrounds the East has ever known and that his handling of a team is close to perfection. Wood is rated as far superior to McWilliams, Carver, Bowman and other quarters Major Sasse has employed this season at the Point.

It probably would be difficult to select six teams as closely matched at this stage of the season as the Yale, Harvard and Princeton clashes bring together. There really isn't much to choose between them and close scores, with a lucky break the deciding factor, would account for the results nine times out of ten. As it now shapes up, Yale, Harvard and Cornell will likely be the favorites, although Brown, except for lightness, ranks as one of the outstanding eastern elevens.

sons shed any light of importance on the mystery.

The five held were John M. Ginsberg, manager of the Monticello Hotel; Marion Strasmick Roberts, show girl sweetheart of Diamond; Joseph Goldie, the assistant hotel manager; Thomas Marshall, clerk; and John Hughes, bell boy. Ginsberg was held under $25,000 bail and the ball of the others was fixed at $5,000 each.

A statement by Ginsberg, which the police said they did not think was the entire truth, brought into the spotlight in the tragedy a new figure. He is Harry Drescher, an associate of Diamond, who lived in room 25 of the Monticello, two floors below the room in which the racketeer was found shot.

The hotel manager asserted that Diamond, as consciousness was leaving him, screamed for Drescher and that Drescher came upstairs and tried to aid him as Ginsberg fled from the scene before the doctor arrived.

Police Commissioner Mulrooney, who heard the story of Ginsberg with District Attorney Crain in the prosecutor's office, sent out a general alarm for the apprehension of Drescher for questioning.

tional disaster reserve fund there is less certainty of prompt and efficient action in the future. The loss of income from interest is equivalent to a half million members; to replace this by new membership is one of the aims of the Fourteenth Annual Roll Call. The former practice of making but two or three appeals to a single chapter during the year may have to be abandoned and intermittent appeals for disaster relief made as frequently as necessity requires.

Protection for the Red Cross both locally and nationally, lies in a great membership increase that will rebuild the reserve of the national organization. There must be new members whose support will replace the lost interest income.

"A great membership is the only means by which the Red Cross can be kept fit for the challenge of the winter."

Conferences, meetings and volunteer organization groups are now outlining plans for the 1930 roll call. The executive work in connection with the membership enrollment will again be in charge of Charles W. Grist who will use the chapter building at 2100 Delancey street, Philadelphia, as headquarters for his activities in the five counties. The Red Cross building at 1510 Locust street, Philadelphia, will be used this year as the distributing center for roll call supplies.

Some Horses Carried Down Alberta Stream

Sitting around during the day the cook sighted three grizzly bears at different times passing far up the mountain. But law prohibited Sunday taking of game, and so they were unmolested.

The following day, Monday, Dr. Vansant and his guide went out for sheep, and came in at night with a three year old ram. Mr. Reed and guide went out for bear, but came in with a mountain goat. They had seen this same goat many times very high up without being able to stalk him. He always seemed to get away, but about four hours later after stalking over a rough, treacherous section Reed made his kill. Indian Johnnie, who was acting as Reed's guide at the time, crawled up the bed of a stream on his hands and knees, with Reed following suit, for awhile. They went over shale slide and rocky ridges, all the time being careful not to let "Billy" see them, as these animals have sharp ears and keen eyes. The kill was a good, big, old one. He was well worth the four hours' scramble and toll.

Another hunting section was headed for on the ninth, and at about 5.30 p. m., a thunderstorm added to our experience, and we had rain to again finish the journey. Wednesday proved to be one of our most eventful days, and we had many thrills and hardships. From six in the morning until 12 at night was the time of action for the rest; but for Indian Johnnie and I it was all day, and all night in the dark and rain. We had been having plenty of moving and very little hunting, and so for that morning we three from the states with two guides planned to take the trail up through the pass to the Hard Scrabble River. While the doctor and Reed went with the big Canadian in one direction, Indian Johnnie and I went to another section, planning to all meet at night on the Hard Scrabble River. The Indian had during the morning, after leaving me with the horses, circled around to find the trail. When he came back he asked if I wanted to kill a bull moose. I answered in the affirmative, and so we left the horses and he took me about a mile down into a dip of wooded timber, where he showed me two bull moose, moving through the trees. I got what I thought was a long shot, but it proved too long as the last I saw of the couple they were still going. Sometime late in the afternoon it started to rain. Johnnie soon after, looking through the trees, pointed out a caribou coming down the mountain across the valley. It was too far away for a rifle shot, and the animal was just about to enter a dense growth of timber. I asked the guide if he could circle around the caribou, and drive him up the mountain side to me, while I stayed there with the horses. He came back in about 20 minutes, and said: "Come, you shoot." We left the horses, and I followed down the mountain side into a glade of open forest, across a wide, roaring stream. After stalking behind tree and underbrush Johnnie pointed out a nice five year old bull moose, only about 150 yards away. It took one shot to bring him to earth, and another to end his struggles, and roll him over an embankment. Johnnie soon had the moose's head, shoulder, and feet skinned, and tated up to his saddle horse. I was somewhat concerned about our place of meeting for the night, for while the Hard Scrabble River was designated there had been no certain location along the stream named, and it was still raining and dismal. Johnnie said the pack train had not passed as there were no tracks, and they would have to pass on the trail we were on. Before long we heard them coming, the horse wrangler shouting at the horses, and noted the clang of the shod hoofs on the rocky trail. They passed far below on another trail, but our yells brought the big Canadian guide up the mountain to where we were. He said he would ride fast ahead, and catch the pack train which had rattled on, bringing back a pack horse to carry our moose which Johnnie was still loading on his saddle horse. But Johnnie and I never saw guide, pack horse or any of the others of the outfit that day or night. It was raining steadily and near dark when Johnnie got packed, and started on, he leading his horse packed with the moose, and I following in the saddle. It was the worst day and night we had, and long to be remembered. We two were out all night, and for the others it was not much better, for it was midnight before they made camp, and for 2 more hours they kept a huge bon-fire going, hoping it might lead us in; but there were too many mountain peaks between us, and Johnnie didn't know how far along the river they intended going. In fact they had gone far past the place where they intended to stop, owing to the darkness.
